The Problem ahead of Us

Premier Bennett's speech, "We have Come to the End of a Perfect Day," was widely explained in the House.

One, that this is a awful town.

Wherein to do for money and town.

And live in hell this Monday.

Nothing to drink and getting to smoke.

Not here to go for amusement.

But I wish I'd never woke.

To burden myself with such nonsense.

Clear out, clear out, before it's too late.

There's plenty more money at this rate.

Where they'll sell you a drink after dinner.

Away to the land where they sell fat cattle.

And don't give a damn if it's Sunday.

Away to the city with wide open space.

Where they'll sell you a drink from Tuesday to Monday.

This is no place for a person's son.

But, my friends, I leave you this duty.

I'm going away from the land of my birth.

To Health, my Blind Pig City.

Well, friends, there's no need to build.

For in the land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.

The land of the living, there's no need to build.
